The Ballad of the Whale. BY READ THORSTON.

The Northman lay on his iron cliff, oking the Norman sea ; With his bold, blue eyes of wild emprise, Abroad o'er the wave looked he.

In a restless mood of solitude. He longs in the chase to roam :

I've conquered the bear in the Tornean wood, And the shark by the deep Maelstroom !" " My fitting for lived long ago-The mighty mustodon!"

His blue eyes bravely glanced below-The chief from his cliff had gone ! Tis the whale; you whale that tempts his sail, Like an island he moveth on-"By the boundless sea, I'll conquer the,

He darted his skiff from the foot of the cliff, All armed with corded spear ; Soon the barb is dyed in the sea beast's side. And away to the West they steer.

With hempen rein, o'er the ocean plain, More fleet than the sledge they go; With the red setting sun a race they run, In the road of its ruddy glow.

And the sterm-waves keep up a glassy calm, That strange first bark to see ; And the sea-gods rose the chase to char And should—"We'll ride with thee!"

And one of their troop the Norman chos To share in his daring deed; White was her breast as the Finland snows, Her heart like the brown sen-weed.

And thus they twain o'er rode the main, And the Norman's shirt of mail, With his shield he clashed, and y land-way washed, Till he stranded the manufacture hale! That night on the strand of Owhyhee's land,

A bowery hat, and the oil he cut, For a lamp from the monster's side. And from these two there sprang a crew, The beldest to spread the sail; And on every plain of the stormy main They chase the tumbling whale! -

He built for his mermaid bride

That which is to be loved long, is to be loved with eason, rather than passion. The heart of a young girl is like a nest where the little swallow chirps, shows its head, tries its wings and watches the favorable moment to fly.

Woman, by the decree of nature, has smiles like the kind heavens, for all creation; and when clouds intervene, and she is sad, her very tears like rain and dew, are equally beneficent. Detract not from others, neither be excessive in

He has high reverence for amusements, and laments deeply the prevalence of the unamusable temperament among our countrymen. The worst con-sequences of this appear after it has driven them

We heard, says the Boston Traveller, of a juvenile prayer—offered up a few nights ago—which exceeds in originality anything we ever heard of. It ran thus

"I lay my body down to sleep, And pray the Lord my soul to keep; If I should die before I wake— Pop goes the weasel."

So saying, she fell asleep. It was about time. IDLE VISITS.—The idle are a very heavy tax upon the industrious, when by frivolous visitations they rob them of their time. Such persons beg their daily happiness from door to door, as beggars their daily read, and, like them, sometimes meet with a rebuff. that we are tired of him, seeing that we are indebted for the honor of his visit solely to the circumstance of his being tired of himself. He sits at home until he has accumulated an insupportable load of ennui, and then sallies forth to distribute it among his acquaint-

Paul, the last and chief of Apostles, also died by LITTLE GIBLS.—There is something inexpressibly sweet about little girls. Lively, pure, innocent, ingenuous, unsuspecting, full of kindness to brothers, babies, and everything. They are little human flowers, diamond dew-drops of the breath of morn. What a pity they should ever become women, flirts, and heartless coquettes!

THE SHANGHAI'S ALARM .- What can that longogged Shanghai mean by uttering his alarm-cluck? Surely he must either see a hawk or his shadow. A Surely he must either see a hawk or his shadow. A hen who is scratching near a wood-pile, flies with all her chickens, and hides beneath the logs. The panic spreads to all the poultry in the yard. Still, neither in the sky nor on the earth do I see hawk or shadow. That long-legged Shanghai must have keen senses. Hark! now I hear them—the bird-of-passage notes of a flock of wild geese. And now I see them wedging their way southward. Long-legged Shanghai! what ails thee? I know thee to be a bird of courage when pitted against thy fellows. What ails thee? And does it hold good with chickens as with men, that a faint sound often breeds more are than a drawn neord?
